Overall summary

License agreement covers GatewayGuard products, including Checkup and the Guide, with separate terms for each.

Checkup is licensed per owned/controlled PC; it is bound to the first computer it runs on, with free license transfer to a replacement PC.

Multi-PC packs are mentioned but some bundle and pack terms remain undecided.

Users may read the source code, keep one backup copy, and quote small portions with attribution.

Users may not share, modify, redistribute, or use Checkup commercially or on organizational computers without a separate agreement.

The Guide is a separate, non-transferable household-use license with limits on sharing, posting, and commercial use.

GatewayGuard warrants that Checkup matches the website description, changes nothing without approval, contains no malware, and does not send user data; some absolute claims were softened.

Checkup reviews installed programs and can flag risks as opinion only; removals require on-screen approval and are logged.

The product is not guaranteed to prevent all threats or remain unchanged after annual Windows updates; users are advised to rerun it after major Windows 11 updates.

Either product can be refunded in full within 30 days with no reason or proof required.

Liability is limited to the amount paid, and Maine law governs disputes.

If terms are violated, the license ends; severability preserves the rest of the agreement if part is unenforceable.
